Gerald Eskenazi discusses impact of National Football League players' strike. Notes strike threatens to idle thousands of people whose jobs depend on football. Points out NFL Management Council, unable to acquire strike insurance, has arranged for $150 million line of credit from consortium of banks led by Crocker Bank of California. Players Assn estimates league's gross revenues in full 16-game season schedule this season would have surpassed $500 million. TV networks are likely to have hard time assessing financial adjustments in their contract with NFL. NYC is expected to lose about $100,000 each time Jets game at Shea Stadium is canceled (M.)

Prof Myles Mace of Harvard Business School feels that corporate chief executive officers should leave board of directors when they retire, and suggests that corporations should implement rules to enforce practice. Contends that retired CEO's 'get in the way,' and their presence on board is likely to hamper operating style and management approach of their successors. Points out that management techniques have changed drastically in past 20 years so that old ideas and solutions are probably no longer valid. Reviews arguments supporting retention of retired CEO's (M).

Dir of Hastings Institute Daniel Callahan discuss moral dilemmas that must be faced by businesses in future as more and more become involved with biomedical research. Points out that future medical advances represent enormous profit potential for companies. Notes moral issues presently plaguing medical research field such as those surrounding recombinant DNA research and containment of rising medical costs. Notes problems that will be created by future medical advancements, such as artificial heart. Speculates that artificial heart will become point of management-labor disputes as labor demands it be part of medical package and that Fed Govt will increase taxes to make it federally available. Urges business community to involve itself in ongoing dialogue so it can assist in finding solutions to these difficult problems. Cartoon.)
